The evaluation function I used was extremely straightforward. To calculate the utility value for a game state, it subtracts the number of points that player 2 has from the number of points that player 1.